Dear Jack,

-/35
John Foster thought that you might be interested in seeing the enclosed copy of a letter from an undergraduate at Harvard from the point of view of the state of feeling in American universities. The background is that Ordway, whose name is mentioned in the letter, came to see me with a strong recommendation from Hume Wrong in the Canadian Legation and put forward ideas for the creation of a group of young men from Harvard and other eastern universities who would go to England to do some form of social work there. They were a very decent lot of young men and we are doing what we can to find some way of using their services, though it seems a little difficult to find a niche to fit them into.

Yours ever,

W.G. Hayter.
